A growing body of evidence confirms that the improved health outcomes associated with breastfeeding are dose-related, with exclusive breastfeeding for about six months conferring the maximum infant and maternal health benefits. Numerous studies have found a significant link between exclusive breastfeeding during the post-birth hospitalization and subsequent breastfeeding duration and exclusivity, including the likelihood of achieving mothers' exclusive breastfeeding intention.

This presentation will equip providers to offer expectant and new mothers empowering information and to provide breastfeeding-friendly maternity services, assessment and management of early breastfeeding difficulties, and essential support to promote the establishment of exclusive breastfeeding.
